Supporting Information

Evaluating Cefoperazone-induced Gut Metabolic Functional Changes in MR1 Deficient Mice

Jinchun Sun[1]*, Zhijun Cao[1], Ashley D. Smith[3], Paul E. Carlson Jr[3], Michael Coryell[3], Huizhong Chen[2], Richard D. Beger[1]

[1]Division of Systems Biology, [2]Division of Microbiology, National Center for Toxicological Research, United States Food and Drug Administration, Jefferson, AR; [3]Laboratory of Mucosal Pathogens and Cellular Immunology, Division of Bacterial, Parasitic, and Allergenic Products, Office of Vaccines Research and Review, Center for Biologics Evaluation and Research, United States Food and Drug Administration, Silver Spring, MD.

* Correspondence to: Jinchun.Sun@fda.hhs.gov

Supporting Table

Table S1. Detected metabolites extracted from fecal samples, intestinal contents and cecal contents collected from KO or WT mice.

Table S2. List of metabolites from fecal samples, in intestinal and cecal contents, which has significant correlation with GABA.

Table S3. List of metabolites from fecal samples, in intestinal and cecal contents, which has significant correlation with riboflavin.