

Approach and descriptive statistics

An initial basic search using the keywords “forest” and “fire” on EUR Lex¹ provided 4362 hits. To narrow the number of documents, two advanced queries were carried out, one focusing on soft documents (e.g., communications) and one on hard documents (e.g., regulations and directives).

The query on hard documents was an advanced search for legal acts, covering regulations, directives, and decisions (excluding implementing and delegated documents), using the keywords “forest” and “fire”. This provided 326 hits. The query on soft documents covered COM, JOIN, SEC and SWD documents, using the same keywords, provided 1096 hits.

All the files were subsequently screened to exclude documents that were not relevant for the analysis. For the hard documents, corrigendum’s, nationally specific regulations, and non-topical documents were excluded. For the soft documents, proposals, country reports, and non-topical documents were excluded. Non-topical documents were simply those that did not address forest fires, such as “Establishing a new statistical classification of products by activity (CPA) (Regulation 451/2008).

The total number of policy documents, after the first screening, amounted to 354 documents, covering 208 soft and 146 hard policy documents (see Fig. 1). The period covered by the soft policies ranged from 1982 to 2021 and for the hard policies from 1966 to 2021 (see Tab. 1 and 2).

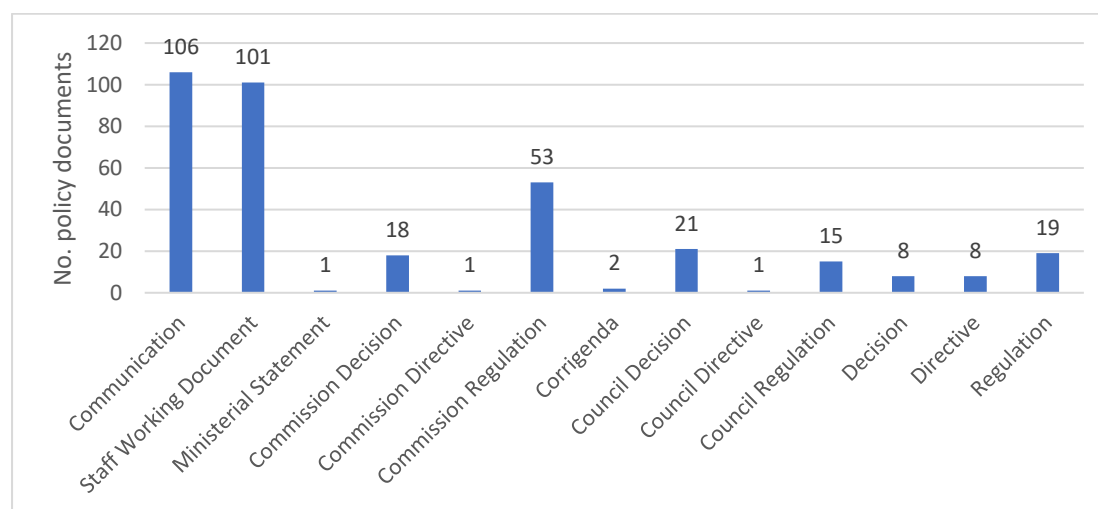

Figure S1. Number and types of policy documents included after the first screening.

Assigning relevance to policy documents

It was decided to assign a low, medium, and high relevance score to all document (see Tab. 1 and 2) through a 2-step process, first, a basic frequency count, and second, a review of each mention of forest fires in the policy documents (see methods section for more details). The relevance score was assigned as follows:

- Low category was given if ‘fire’ was only mentioned 1 to 3 times in the document, preferably in the introduction. However, judgment calls were also made while assigning relevance. For example, in the Commission staff working paper Security Industrial Policy (SWD(2012) 233), fire is mentioned 46 times; however, this is entirely in the context of fire alarms. In these cases, a low level of relevance was assigned.

- The medium to high relevance was also assigned based on the frequency of ‘fire’, where fire had to be mentioned at least 4 to 9 times for a medium score, and 10 times or more for it to be labelled as highly relevant. However, this was not a strict cut-off point as the documents varied significantly in page length and content. This means that judgement calls were also made at this level. For example, the Communication “The Future of the European Union Solidarity Fund” (COM(2011) 613) mentions fire 18 times, but 16 out of these are for EU Solidarity Fund Applications. For this example, a medium score was assigned.

It should also be noted that 94 policy documents were excluded from the analysis at this stage because they made no useful reference to forest fires.

After the second screening:

- From the 208 soft policy documents, 164 (78.8%) were retained for further analysis. From these, 94 (57.3%) documents were of low, 32 (19.5%) of medium, and 38 (23.2%) of high relevance (Supp. Tab. 1).
- From the 149 hard policy documents, 99 (66.4%) were retained for further analysis. From these, 63 (63.6%) documents were of low, 16 (16.1%) of medium, and 20 (20.2%) of high relevance (Supp. Tab. 2).

The ranking (high to low) is further reflected in the coding. For the soft policy documents, 1227 codes were allocated, out of which 830 (67.6%) were in those documents considered highly relevant. Bearing in mind that this came from only 38 documents (or 23.2% of the entire sample), this reflects that the coding and analysis appropriately reflects their overall relevance.

The same applies to the hard policy documents, where out of 429 codes, 242 (56.4%) were in those considered highly relevant. It can also be noted that 54 search results, covering 19 (3.1%) soft policy documents and 35 (8.1%) hard policy documents, were labelled as not relevant. This included, for example, weblinks or source references that included forest and/or fire. It can be noted that the proportionally higher degree of not relevant citations amongst the hard policies are due to the many reporting templates that are included.

History of the EUs Forest Fire Policy

The protection of European forests falls under the competence of EU countries. However, several Directorates-General (DGs) at the European Commission (EC) nevertheless address forest fires (e.g., firefighting and restoration), including DG Environment, DG Research, DG Agriculture and Rural Development, DG Regional Policy, and DG ECHO. In terms of legislation, the regulation on the protection of the Community's forests against fire (Regulation, 2158/92) provided one of the first policy frameworks for specific measures devoted to forest fire prevention between 1992 and 2002 (e.g., supporting national restoration efforts). This regulation was replaced by Forest Focus Regulation (Regulation, 2152/2003), which continued supporting the implementation of forest fire prevention measures. In turn, the LIFE programme (Regulation, 614/2007) continued to address the objectives of Forest Focus after it expired in 2006. For example, financing under the LIFE programme is presently available until 2027, covering forest monitoring activities, information systems, and forest fires prevention.²

The Common Agricultural Policy (CAP) and the regulation on support for rural development by the European Agricultural Fund for Rural Development (EAFRD), which was adopted in 2014, furthermore provides support for the restoration of forests and fire prevention activities (Regulation, 1305/2013). The regulation obliges Member States, amongst other things, to classify areas that face particular fire risks in their forest protection plans. For example, if an area is classified as being a high or medium risk area, countries are obliged to implement measures for preventing fires and restoring damage from fire.

Another relevant instrument is the EU Solidarity Fund, which was set up to provide Member States with support to deal with damage from catastrophic events, including forest fires (Regulation, 2012/2002). This is thematically interlinked with the EU Civil Protection Mechanism,³ which ensures the rapid deployment of resources and personnel based on the emergency (e.g., 30 per cent of all requests for assistance were linked to wildfires between 2007 and 2019). The ECs Emergency Response Coordination Centre,⁴ under the auspices of the Civil Protection Mechanism, monitors forest fire risks and emergencies across Europe, supported by national and European monitoring services, such as EFFIS.

It can also be noted that the Expert Group on Forest Fires,⁵ established by DG Environment in 1998, provides the EC and Member States with advice and support on matters related to forest fires prevention and mitigation. The members of the Expert Group are also the national correspondents of EFFIS, which provide EU level assessments of situations before and after fires (e.g., risk mapping and post-fire evaluations). For example, the Expert Group recently published guidelines on land-based wildfire prevention in 2021 (EC, 2021b).

Finally, it can be mentioned that there is a legislative proposal for a new EU framework for forest monitoring and strategic plans, which the EC has proposed as part of the third and most recent EU Forest Strategy (EC, 2021c, 2021a, Aggestam and Giurca, 2021). This law is expected to be adopted in 2023 and, if it passes, may help in improving the monitoring and identification of high-risk fire areas (e.g., dense plantations of maritime pine). There was a public consultation on the proposal which wrapped up in November 2022.
