

Special Issue

The Bible in Literature: New Approaches to Literary Engagement with the Bible

Message from the Guest Editor

This special issue of Religions seeks to present outstanding examples of recent developments in the study of the Bible in literature. Literary scholars today find themselves equipped with an array of significant approaches to and methods for studying literary engagements with the Bible. A generation of scholars has produced books of major importance that, amidst years of debate, some of it ongoing, have set out typological, narratological, formal, translation-related, and cultural questions that can be said to constitute the parameters of the field of “the Bible and literature.” Papers for the special issue must in some way address significant literary engagement with the Bible. Studies focused on literature in any language, post-medieval to the present, are welcome, as are studies that address literature and the Bible in relation to topics in translation and/or cultural theories, philosophy, or theology. All submissions must be written in English, and English translations of all quotations in other languages must be provided in the paper.

About the Journal

Message from the Editorial Board

Fresh developments in the disciplines that consistently make significant contributions to our understanding of religious personality, authority, devotion, and community – disciplines ranging from psychology, sociology, and anthropology to history, art history, philosophy, literary criticism, and political science – fuel general, as well as scholarly, interest in the world's religions.

Religions is inviting innovative and comparative contributions. Please consider Religions as an exceptional, exciting enterprise ready to reward your trust, attention, and participation.
