

Special Issue

The Epistemology of Religious Experience

Message from the Guest Editor

This Special Issue of Religions will focus on the epistemology of religious experience. The overall driving question is the question as to what evidential force religious experiences have. This discussion involves several subtopics, including the following: (1) To what degree is trust in testimony relevant? (2) In what ways is religious experience like other kinds of experience? (3) To what extent does religious experience influence religious doctrine, and to what extent is it influenced by it? (4) What are the implications of religious diversity/disagreement for claims of religious experience? (5) How, if in any way, has the cognitive science of religion shed light on these issues? This issue aims to approach these questions from a variety of religious traditions, with input from a variety of academic disciplines. The result will be a collection of high-quality papers that can inform further research in a variety of academic fields.

About the Journal

Message from the Editorial Board

Fresh developments in the disciplines that consistently make significant contributions to our understanding of religious personality, authority, devotion, and community – disciplines ranging from psychology, sociology, and anthropology to history, art history, philosophy, literary criticism, and political science – fuel general, as well as scholarly, interest in the world's religions.

Religions is inviting innovative and comparative contributions. Please consider Religions as an exceptional, exciting enterprise ready to reward your trust, attention, and participation.
