Religious Utopianism

Message from the Guest Editor

In utopian studies, discussions of religious utopianism are often limited. Religions, however, are complex and have many other aspects. Utopias and utopianism have been defined as “dreams of a better life” (E. Bloch, 1986) and a “desire for a better way of being” (R. Levitas, 1990). Religious utopianism conforms to these broad definitions, but it also has its peculiarities. This Special Issue invites scholars to look at religions as socio-cultural constructs which are, in their totality, utopian. Articles may be: (1) theoretical discussions about religious utopianism or (2) critical explorations of specific visions of religious “better” realities and “better” ways of being and the way they manifest in (a) material and non-material culture (within religious or non-religious contexts) or (b) in relation to social groups, social and political theories, past and current social movements, and past and current public debates. I look forward to receiving your contributions.

About the Journal

Message from the Editorial Board

Fresh developments in the disciplines that consistently make significant contributions to our understanding of religious personality, authority, devotion, and community – disciplines ranging from psychology, sociology, and anthropology to history, art history, philosophy, literary criticism, and political science – fuel general, as well as scholarly, interest in the world's religions.

Religions is inviting innovative and comparative contributions. Please consider Religions as an exceptional, exciting enterprise ready to reward your trust, attention, and participation.
