Wildlife Health and Disease in Conservation

Message from the Guest Editor

We invite submissions for the Special Issue of Veterinary Sciences on “Wildlife Health and Disease in Conservation”, focusing on disease, causative agents, and their impact on threatened wildlife conservation. External factors such as climate change, habitat encroachment, human–wildlife interactions, pollution, and invasive species pose novel threats, increasing mortality and morbidity among wildlife worldwide. Thus, how these emerging and re-emerging threats influence or intensify the degree of occurrence of novel host–pathogen interactions remains poorly understood. This Special Issue seeks manuscripts addressing wildlife disease threats within a conservation context, inclusive of, but not limited to, novel host–pathogen relationships, particularly in endangered and vulnerable species.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Veterinary Sciences (ISSN 2306-7381) is an international and interdisciplinary scholarly open access journal that aims at publishing research in all fields of veterinary medicine in a democratic way. We encourage scientists to publish their original research articles, reviews, communications, and short notes in as much detail as possible. Articles submitted that involve subjecting animals to unnecessary pain or suffering will not be accepted, and all articles must be submitted with the necessary ethical approval (please refer to the Ethical Guidelines for more information).
